In what federal law enforcement officials described as possibly the biggest break in the Boston Marathon bombing case yet, investigators said yesterday that they spotted a suspect on video surveillance placing a bag at the blast site.

Surveillance video taken by cameras at Lord & Taylor on Boylston Street helped identify the suspect, which initial reports described as a "dark-skinned male" placing a backpack at the explosion site.

No arrests had been made, and as of last night the suspect in the video had not been identified by name, two U.S. government officials said.

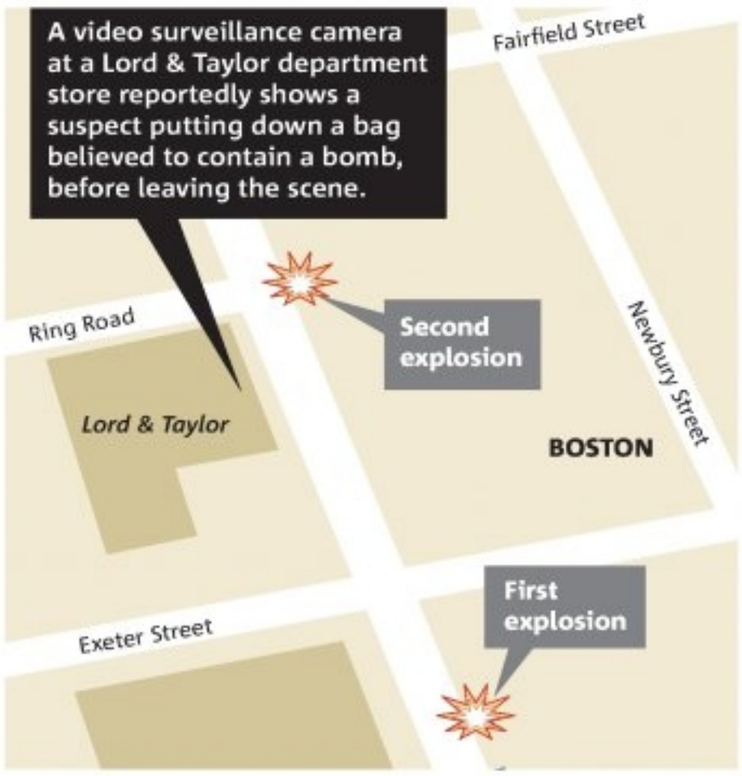
The Associated Press reported yesterday that a law enforcement official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to discuss the case publicly, confirmed that investigators had an image of a potential suspect but did not know his identity.

False reports yesterday that claimed a suspect had been arrested in connection with bombings sparked a media frenzy.

Reporters and curious spectators quickly swarmed the federal courthouse based on incorrect reports that the suspect was due in court, and a bomb threat at the courthouse fed the hysteria.

Federal investigators were first expected to brief the nation at 1:30 p.m., but that event was rescheduled until 5 p.m.

Moakley Courthouse's afternoon bomb scare thwarted that plan, and the briefing was rescheduled for 8 p.m., but that event never materialized.



A video surveillance camera at a Lord & Taylor department store reportedly shows a suspect putting down a bag believed to contain a bomb, before leaving the scene.

Bomb threat evacuates federal court

Heavily armed agents swept the federal courthouse in South Boston.
NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Security officials yesterday afternoon ordered the full evacuation of the Moakley Federal Courthouse in South Boston due to a bomb threat.

A "code red" was issued as hundreds gathered outside around 3 p.m., shortly after false media reports claimed investigators had a suspect in custody in connection with the Boston Marathon bombings, and that he was immediately due in court.

Federal and local officials later said those reports were incorrect and no arrests had been made.

A uniformed law enforcement official reportedly yelled to media gathered outside the court, "Get away from the building. I can't stress this enough, people," before employees trickled out of the building.

The evacuees included two children in cribs from the courthouse day care center, as well at attorneys and all court employees.

Scores of people remained outside the courthouse and away from the building as investigators swept the area. Around 4:15 p.m., a security officer walked out of the courthouse and waved a green flag, signaling that employees could return.

The bomb threat and temporary evacuation caused investigators to push back a media briefing that was set for 5 p.m., leaving members of the media and public hungry for answers on what kind of developments may have surfaced in connection to the bombings.

Brigham and Women's Hospital also had a similar scare yesterday. A portion of the hospital was evacuated around 3 p.m. after a person pulled up to the Francis Street valet entrance and left the car unattended.

Hospital Spokeswoman Erin McDonough told The Boston Globe that valets noticed gas cans inside the car, and security ordered an evacuation of the building out of an abundance of caution "because it's post-marathon."

After a few minutes, people were allowed to return inside. MORGAN ROUSSEAU

Highest honors. Obamas to attend memorial for Boston bombing victims

President Barack Obama and First Lady Michelle Obama are expected to attend an interfaith memorial service in the South End today to honor the victims of Monday's Marathon bombings.

Obama is expected to speak at the public memorial, which has been dubbed "Healing Our City: An Interfaith Service at the Cathedral of the Holy Cross in Boston."

All are welcome to attend the service, which officials describe as an opportunity for the community to come together in the wake of Monday's deadly bombings.

The president told the nation Tuesday that "we will find whoever harmed our citizens and we will bring them to justice. The American people refuse to be terrorized."

White House Press Secretary Jay Carney said yesterday that he did not know whether Obama would visit any of the injured victims, or tour the bombing site during his visit to Boston.

Mayor Thomas Menino and Gov. Deval Patrick will join the Obamas at today's memorial, as will federal, state and local officials.

State officials said the service will be televised.

First responders, civic leaders from communities along the marathon route, medical personnel, victims and their families, as well as volunteers from the Boston Athletic Association, have been invited to attend.

Doors for the service will open at 8 a.m. and tickets will be released on a first come, first serve basis to those in line at the cathedral.

Security is expected to be strict, with state officials warning guests to be prepared for "airport-like security," and not to bother bringing bags, sharp objects, liquids or signs.

Lu Lingzi: BU student ID'd as third bombing casualty

One of the victims killed by blasts at the Boston Marathon on Monday was identified yesterday as Boston University graduate student Lu Lingzi.

Lingzi, a mathematics and statistics student, was one of three friends watching the race near the finish line. Zhou Danling, also a BU graduate student, is in stable condition at Boston Medical Center.

A former middle school teacher spoke with a Chinese TV station about Lingzi before her death was confirmed, saying "She was exceptionally smart and down to earth. ... Even though it has been many years, my impression of her is still deep."

University officials said they were offering counseling services to students.

Robert Hill, dean of Marsh Chapel, visited Danling on Monday evening and again Tuesday afternoon. He reports that she underwent surgery on both days.

"She is doing well. ... She has her friends around her, and she will soon have family around her," Hill said.

The third Boston University student was unharmed.

Martin Richard, 8, of Dorchester and Krystle Campbell of Medford, 29, were also killed by the blasts. METRO/MR

Photos reveal bomb parts

Explosives. FBI photos show twisted pressure cooker, wires, a battery and circuit board.

Boston Marathon bomb-scene pictures taken by investigators and released late Tuesday show the remains of an explosive device, including twisted pieces of a metal container, wires, a battery and what appears to be a small circuit board.

A government official, who declined to be identified, made the pictures available to Reuters.

The official said they were taken by Boston's Joint Terrorism Task Force at the scene where two bombs killed three people and wounded 176.

One picture shows charred wires attached to a small box, and another depicts a half-inch nail and a zipper head stained with blood. Another shows a Tenergy brand battery attached to black and red wires through a broken plastic cap.

Several photos show a twisted metal lid with bolts. The FBI said on Tuesday that a pressure cooker may have been used to build the bombs.

The FBI said previously the evidence would be used to reconstruct the device or devices at a lab in Quantico, Virginia.

Among the items recovered were pieces of black nylon that the FBI said could be from a bag used to carry bombs that may have been made with a pressure cooker. REUTERS

Dogs bringing comfort to victims

Following the deadly bombings at the Boston Marathon finish line, dogs from the Lutheran Church K-9 Comfort Dogs program are visiting the First Lutheran Church of Boston.

The church, which is a few blocks from the finish line of the marathon, is giving Bostonians the chance to hug, pet and spend time with the comfort dogs.

According to Boston Magazine, the dogs were deployed to Boston on Monday and will be at the church through Sunday, April 21.

Rev. Ingo Dutzmann, pastor of the First Lutheran Church, said the church as been packed with people since the dogs arrived.

"These dogs are 100 percent geared toward how they can make someone feel better," he told Boston Magazine, adding that animals have an "uncanny ability" to detect sadness and distress. METRO

CARLOS ARREDONDO

The man who ran into the middle of the marathon bombing aftermath with nothing but a cowboy hat and American flag speaks about that day and reflects on his own tragic losses.

'NO MORE HURTING PEOPLE'

There were many heroes at work immediately following Monday's explosions at the Boston Marathon, but one wild-eyed man in a cowboy hat has caught many people's attention in the days since photos surfaced of him whisking away a man whose legs had been blown off.

Carlos Arredondo tore down the metal barricades to help medics and police get through, and he comforted and saved an amputee in danger of bleeding to death. Never in his wildest dreams did the 52-year-old Roslindale resident think the day would go that way.

"We started the day so happy because my sons were being honored by the National Guard and a runner. It was a great day to celebrate their memory," says Arredondo, who has lost both of his sons. Alexander was killed serving with the Marines in Iraq, and Brian's depression led to his suicide.

Quoted

"I heard boom and saw this big fireball and smoke. Then the second one happened and we didn't know if another bomb was about to go off."

Arredondo

When the first bomb went off, Arredondo was busy handing out American flags and was down to his last one.

"I heard a boom and saw this big fireball and smoke. Then the second one happened and we didn't know if another bomb was about to go off."

He knew his wife was safe across the street, so instead of fleeing with everyone else, he stayed. The volunteer firefighter, who has also worked as a rodeo clown and suffered severe burns from setting himself on fire, said his body was already wired for adrenaline and he simply went into action.

Eventually, shock set in.

"It's strange — like, did this horrible thing really happen," he says, astounded, still in possession of the last flag that is now stained with blood.

He hasn't slept much, and everyone is at his door — police, FBI, press. He's a realistic man and he fears reprisals.

"You never who is out there," he said.

But this polite man shares the same message as 8-year-old bombing casualty Martin Richard, who before he died made a banner that read "No more hurting people. Peace." Arredondo agrees.

"Look," he says pointing to his small garden where two big signs stand, "No more war," he reads.

The only movie star who matters

Will Smith is the world's biggest movie star. Nobody can touch him. But how did he become the biggest star of the millennium — or should that be Willennium? Boffo hit movies have padded out his bank account, but there are other intangibles that set him apart.

1 Smith owns the camera. Even in his first starring role on the sitcom "The Fresh Prince of Bel-Air," where you could see him mouthing the other actor's lines, he stood out. What he lacked in technique, he made up in charisma.

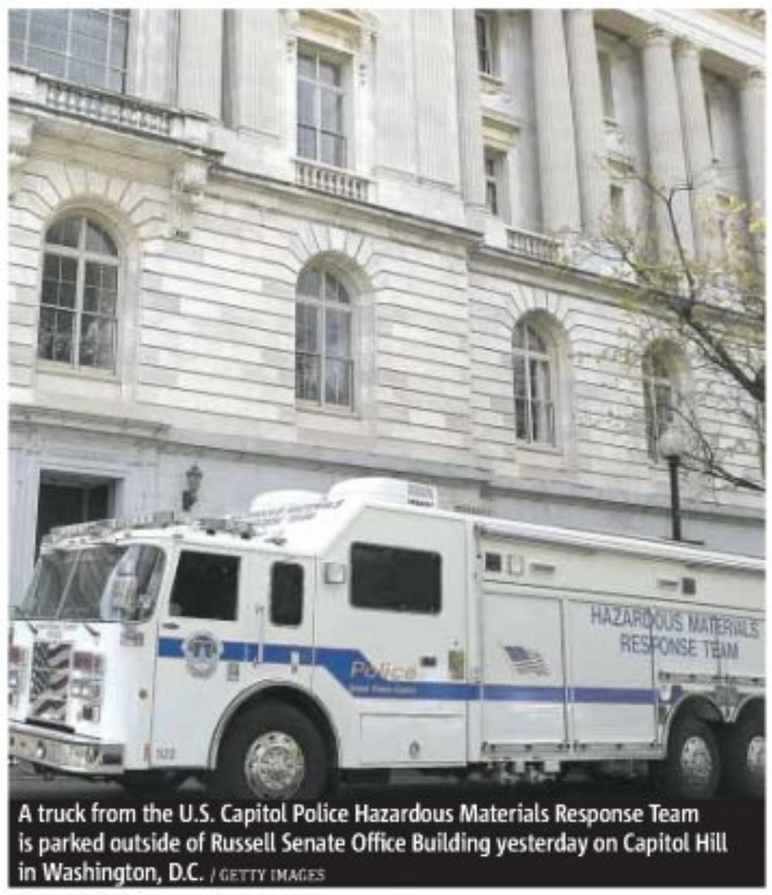
2 Smith works hard. "I'm above average in talent," he said in 1996, "but where I think I excel is psychotic drive. All I need is for somebody to say I can't do something and this crazy switch inside me makes me attack whatever I'm doing. Psychotic drive is where I excel over people that are probably more naturally gifted."

3 Smith is possibly the most bankable star on the planet. He's even more popular abroad than he is at home. Big Willie's movies have taken home $6 billion worldwide. That's billion with a "B." He was the first actor to have eight consecutive movies break the $100 million mark at the box office.

4 Smith can do it all. As an action hero, he's annihilated more onscreen aliens than almost any other A-lister. Then he proved he could play comedy and kill aliens in "Men In Black." When he gets serious, as he did in "Ali" and "The Pursuit of Happyness," he earns Oscar nominations.

5 Smith is an empire builder. He and wife Jada Pinkett Smith have passed down their magical DNA to a future generation of actors and singers. MWN

Arrest made in poisoned letter scare in Washington



A truck from the U.S. Capitol Police Hazardous Materials Response Team is parked outside of Russell Senate Office Building yesterday on Capitol Hill in Washington, D.C. / GETTY IMAGES

Poisonous post. The letter was received at a mail-screening facility on Tuesday.

The FBI said it arrested Paul Kevin Curtis of Corinth, Miss., yesterday in connection with ricin-laced letters sent to U.S. officials, including President Barack Obama.

Curtis is "believed to be responsible for the mailings of the three letters sent through the U.S. Postal Inspection Service, which contained a granular substance that preliminarily tested positive for ricin," according to a statement by the FBI.

The letters were addressed to a senator, the White House and a Mississippi justice official, the FBI said.

A letter addressed to President Barack Obama contained a substance that preliminarily tested positive for the deadly poison ricin, authorities said yesterday.

News that the letter to Obama was being investigated came as a flurry of other reports of suspicious letters and a package caused the evacuation of parts of two Senate buildings and set nerves in Washington on edge.

The same FBI statement that confirmed the positive test results cautioned: "There is no indication of a connection to the attack in Boston," where three people were killed in bombings at the Boston Marathon on Monday.

The mail facility that received the letter was not located near the White House itself, Secret Service spokesman Edwin Donovan said in a statement.

Parts of the Russell and Hart Senate office buildings were cleared while officials investigated, a Capitol Police spokesman said. REUTERS

In blow to Obama, Senate blocks gun-control ruling

Gun control. The votes were the culmination of weeks of intense negotiations and lobbying over Obama's proposed gun restrictions.

President Barack Obama hugs Nicole Hockley, the mother of Newtown shooting victim Dylan, after speaking on gun control yesterday in the Rose Garden of the White House. / GETTY IMAGES

The Senate yesterday rejected a bipartisan plan to expand background checks for gun buyers, dealing a crippling blow to President Barack Obama's campaign to curb gun violence after the Newtown school massacre.

Despite emotional pleas from families of victims of the Newtown, Conn., shootings and broad public support nationwide, the plan to extend background checks to online and gun-show sales failed on a 54-46 vote, six short of the 60-vote hurdle needed to clear the Senate.

"All in all, this was a pretty shameful day for Washington," an angry Obama said of the vote, adding the effort "is not over."

The amendment by Democrat Joe Manchin of West Virginia and Republican Pat Toomey of Pennsylvania had represented Obama's best hope to pass meaningful gun-control legislation after the December massacre of 20 children and six adults at an elementary school in Newtown.

Other measures backed by Obama — including a proposal to ban rapid-firing "assault" weapons like the one used in Connecticut — also failed in a series of Senate votes that starkly showed the lingering political power of gun-rights defenders and the National Rifle Association.

"It came down to politics," Obama said, adding too many senators had worried a vocal minority of gun owners would come after them in the next election. REUTERS

Magazine limits

High-capacity gun magazine ban also dies in Senate

The Senate yesterday rejected a Democratic proposal to ban nearly all high-capacity gun ammunition clips and magazines containing more than 10 rounds, cementing a major defeat of President Barack Obama's guncontrol efforts.

The Senate voted 46 in favor and 54 against the measure after defeating a military-style assault weapons ban and failing to muster enough votes to expand gun-purchase background checks to Internet sales and gun shows. REUTERS

Culkin gets angry in London

Macaulay Culkin isn't having that great of a stay in London, if his run-ins with the paparazzi are any indication. The former child star first seemed perturbed by the photographers' presence while checking into his hotel, the Budget Ibis. Tensions boiled over while Culkin was leaving nightclub the Haunt after joining pal Adam Green onstage, according to E! News. Culkin reportedly launched himself at a paparazzo and began attacking him, telling him to go to hell. It's unclear what set the actor off. Attacking? Macaulay! Set booby traps! That will show them a thing or two.

What is going on with Rihanna?

Rihanna's Diamonds World Tour, which kicked off March 8, isn't going exactly as planned.

The singer has already canceled three concerts — Baltimore and Boston last month and Houston on Monday. Her promoter Live Nation confirmed only that the cancellations were "as a result of illness" but did not say what was wrong with the star. When she canceled the Boston show, she tweeted fans that morning, saying: "[Boston] this is the hardest thing for me to deal with! I feel like we've been waiting on this day forever, and I'm hurt that I let you down. … I hate disappointing people that never ever let me down!! I'm so embarrassed about this! Thank you for your prayers and well wishes!"

Her camp is claiming "laryngitis," but the tabloid press is claiming "pregnant." TMZ spotted the singer, covered up in a baseball cap and sucking on a lollipop, leaving a medical building on Tuesday.

If you check out the singer's Instagram, you will see she is a connoisseur of the green stuff. So maybe if she laid off the pot, perhaps that would help this whole "laryngitis" issue. I know it would definitely help this possible "pregnancy" situation.

Revenge of the nerds

Theater. "She Kills Monsters" is a (live action role) play geared towards the anime set.

The cast of "She Kills Monsters" is ready for battle. / COMPANY ONE

"She Kills Monsters" feels like an homage to the time when the validation of nerds first began.

You don't have to be a die-hard fan of "Dungeons and Dragons" to appreciate Company One's latest production. But it helps. Nerds of all ages will delight as swords fly and heads roll in this "time before Facebook" when you were instructed to "give in to your given circumstances." They'll easily overlook many of this play's shortcomings while wrapped up in the sheer delight of watching a band of hot nerds dance-battle a gang of evil cheerleaders.

For the rest of us, though, it's not quite as easy to fall under its spell. If the warbling set pieces are meant to be cheap, flimsy and distracting, they've succeeded. They only serve to detract from the storytelling. The same can be said of the wrinkled sheets on which graphics are projected during the show's opening.

The story stumbles in places, but, to its credit, retro pop-culture references to "The Real World" and "Friends" are snappy enough to help one forgive many of the its missteps.

And it's hard to dispute the quality of the acting. Mike Handelman delivers an authentically riotous turn as Chuck D.M. Biggs. Noam Ash is delightful as nerd extraordinaire Steve, while Meredith Saran and Jordan Clark bring the sex appeal as Lilith and Tilly, respectively.

This troupe somehow makes you forget what it was you didn't like about "She Kills Monsters" in the first place. Ultimately, everyone's rooting for the nerds.

YOU COMPLETE YOU: HAPPINESS IS YOUR RESPONSIBILITY

"Before you can get into a relationship, you should be happy by yourself." We hear that and mistakenly think it literally means "you should be happy being alone." We assume the wisdom imparted here is to not want relationships, or even to stop looking for one. But that's not what this quote means at all.

Being happy by yourself means you need to take responsibility for your own happiness. This is not just semantics. This means recognizing the areas of your life that don't' feel fulfilled — if you don't feel good about yourself, you're bored with your job or feel disconnected from your friends and family, or aren't happy with what you've accomplished. These are all issues that only you can solve; a relationship won't solve them for you.

We grow up with an idealized notion of romantic relationships. We're told that when we find the right person, things will be perfect. We believe that any emptiness or discontentment we feel in any aspect of our lives will disappear once we find the right partner. But the Jerry Maguire idea that "you complete me" just isn't reality. You have to complete yourself.

Yes, relationships can be amazingly distracting. In the initial phases when the sparks are flying, nothing else seems to matter. But this is a temporary Band Aid, because as the sparks calm down you'll be left with the same unresolved issues you had before the relationship started. Even better, you could peg those problems on your partner, or think there's something wrong with the relationship because you don't feel so great (hence the advice to make yourself happy before getting involved).

Sooner or later, you have to take responsibility for your own life — single or not. / THINKSTOCK

"Relationships can be amazingly distracting. ... But this is a temporary Band Aid, because as the sparks calm down you'll be left with the same unresolved issues you had before the relationship started."

The point is, sooner or later you have to take responsibility for your own life. Whether you're single, or involved in something serious, you have to take care of yourself. And while it's easier to blame our lack of happiness on not having someone or having someone that's not acting the right way, life is rarely that simple. As important as our intimate relationships are, they will not magically fulfill you.

Today we are all Bostonians.

Boston is my city, it's your city.
And on April 15th, it became the world's city.
Our hearts and prayers go out to all who are suffering.
Today, with tears still in our eyes,
we are all Bostonians.

ARE YOU A VICTIM OF CURSES?

"My family and I find out that there was a lot of jealousy and witchcraft being sent to block us from finding happiness or success. We moved from place to place, but without results. A friend of mine invited me to the Spiritual Cleansing Sessions, and that was the turning point of my life. I learned to overcome negativity and evil that was being sent against me. Today, I have peace, financial success, and living in harmony." - Danna

There is a way to break curses and be cleansed from evil. We invite you to break any spells or curses in your life, when evil is at work to a much greater degree than usual.

Finding the Joy in solitude

Cabin fever. The Joy Formidable turned a canceled gig up north into a majestic album.

Normally, a canceled gig is a big setback for a touring band. For the Joy Formidable, however, one particular ditched show turned into creative gold. Dial back to Thanksgiving 2011: The British rock band's U.S. tour for their debut, "The Big Roar," was headed to Portland, Maine. Then the venue abruptly closed, canceling what was the last show before a week off. What to do? Head home early for a rest, or travel deeper into Maine? They chose the latter.

"We'd been writing on the road," says singer/guitarist Ritzy Bryan. "It's difficult to track on buses and in hotel rooms. There's only a certain amount of charm that having background noise brings to a record. ... We were very excited by what we were writing and we needed time to reflect on it."

So the trio chose a different type of lodging.

"We rented a cabin in the woods for a week," says Bryan. "The cabin had such a great energy we decided to go back there in January to finish the record, to make sense of it all."

Their stay didn't turn into a horror movie. Instead, with no distractions — no Wi-Fi, no phone – Bryan and her bandmates found the perfect spot to craft their sophomore album, "Wolf's Law."

Unusually, the title song is a hidden track — but in many ways, it's the album's most important. It was written in London, one of the first new songs after their debut, and it's the link between the nascent band and what is now a seasoned trio.

"'Wolf's Law' was a big part of making this record, almost too big," says Bryan. "We needed to include it, but we always felt that it belonged on its own because it was conceived almost as an art piece. It needs a space on its own."

Serenity now!

The Maine thing

Bryan recalls those three weeks in the dead of winter in Maine and laughs: "To the locals, it was quite a mild winter, which we were completely bewildered by. We were scooping up 9 feet of snow in the backyard. But it was perfect. There's an extra level of serenity that befell the cabin from having that much snow."

Fleetwood Mac are equally famous for their music, which dominated pop rock in the late '70s by bringing together all its disparate strands in a single act, and for their tense interpersonal struggles, which have made reunions of their classic lineup frustratingly sporadic. Singer/keyboardist Christine McVie remains absent this time around, but four out of five ain't bad, right? Here's hoping they crack out some old chestnuts — "Rhiannon" wouldn't be unwelcome, for one. Also, be sure to visit www.metro.us tomorrow to read our review, which will be penned by none other than legendary rock writer Stephen Davis!

10 Films to see this week

Tom Cruise is one of the last humans on a postapocalyptic Earth in "Oblivion." / UNIVERSAL PICTURES

1 'Oblivion' Tom Cruise stars in a sci-fi extravaganza. Insert Scientology joke here.

2 'The Lords of Salem' Sorry, haters: Rob Zombie is an actual film auteur. His sixth feature concerns a gaggle of (naked) witches who set their sights on claiming a metal DJ (Sheri Moon Zombie, the director's wife).

3 'Blancanieves' Both the latest faux-silent film and the latest "twist" on "Snow White," Pablo Berger's Spanish production retells the fairy tale without sound and with the brunette now a lady bullfighter.

4 'Fierce Green Fire' Meryl Streep, Robert Redford and Ashley Judd trade narration duties on this documentary delving into the history of the environmental movement from the 1960s to today.

5 '42' There hasn't been a film about Jackie Robinson since 1950's "The Jackie Robinson Story," starring Jackie Robinson himself as Jackie Robinson. Chadwick Boseman embodies the first African-American major leaguer, with Harrison Ford in there, too, grumping up a storm.

6 'Scary Movie 5' Spike Lee's cousin Malcolm takes over the franchise from David Zuker, who took it over from the Wayanses. Gone, too, is Anna Faris, but at least there are fresh jokes about Charlie Sheen and Lindsay Lohan, finally getting their due.

7 'To the Wonder' With another Terrence Malick movie comes another guilt trip you deserve for not seeing it: Go see Malick's sixth-ever film, which is far, far better than its naysayers are naysaying.

8 'The Company You Keep' Robert Redford has made lefty films before, but none so genuinely hot-button as this one about the Weather Underground. Redford himself stars as a former radical on the lam from people who want to lock up 76-year-olds for decades-old crimes.

9 'Trance' Director Danny Boyle follows up his "Slumdog Millionaire"-"127 Hours" streak with a brain twister about art theft.

10 'The Place Beyond the Pines' Good news, ladies: There's a new movie with the Gosling and BCoop! Better news: It's a heavy, epic sins-of-the-father mega-drama where the hotties share a single shot and Gosling rocks a face tattoo.

Dave Wethman and Emma Bountry nibble on bar snacks at the wine and pizza bar, Posto, in Somerville's Davis Square.
ERIN BALDASSARI, METRO

Quit your whining and start wining

Nosh on. Posto and Taberna de Haro have little in common when it comes to cuisine, but oh, those wine lists.

Posto's three-sided bar breaks up a modern, airy room with an open kitchen that is warmed, visually and physically, by a wood-fired oven. One isn't necessarily compelled to pie-up here, though. Maine crab stuffed ravioli resting in a bright green, soupy pea puree — thin slivers of pink radish add a splash of appetizing color — smacks of spring. Cod saltimbocca, served atop a bed of creamy celeriac topped with Brussels sprouts — simply blanched and chopped — is complemented by a sweet marsala jus. The cod comes lightly wrapped in prosciutto, just enough to create a flavorsome "bacony" crust during cooking without overwhelming the fish.

But Posto's crisp crust pizzas are undoubtedly popular, and rightly so. Take the prosciutto pie, topped with a plentiful layer of thinly sliced cured pork tops and arugula tossed with a wonderful lemon and anchovy dressing. Softly creamy fiore de latte sits enticingly underneath. Not in the mood for a slice? Snack instead on crisply coated arancini laced with lemon and stuffed with rice moistened nicely by melted mozzarella. Either will leave you full and satisfied.

Next, head over to Brookline's Taberna de Haro, where you can take your pick of seats. Grab a stool at the vibrantly decorated bar, a seat at a table inside the rustic cafe, or take it to the street with a spot in the sun out on the patio. Haro originally opened as a tapas and wine bar in 1998, but expanded last summer — almost doubling in size and adding some new entrees to its menu, such as a roasted organically raised chicken served with fries. This studied simplicity informs Haro's tapas as well: chunky battered haddock croquettes are flavored smartly with garlic, lemon and a sprinkling of herbs. Spicy grilled shrimp simmers in olive oil, pepper flakes and chopped garlic. Sauteed artichoke hearts are similarly dressed in just garlic and oil. House-cured sliced lamb — slightly gamey — served atop a pan-roasted potato offers heartier fare. Though not technically tapas, one might snack before dinner upon a black and shiny cuttlefish paella, rounding out a fine selection of small bites.

Posto's menu focuses on pizza and Taberna de Haro's on tapas but, for casual joints, both eateries have serious wine fixations. Taberna de Haro boasts 300 Spanish wines, including 35 sherries. A fino sherry is an aperitif and the Inocente is drier than devil's breath and just as funky. Posto's wine list includes the beautifully named Windspiel, an Austrian white Grüner Veltliner that's not certified organic, but created via eco-aware viticulture.

Bar Heritage Collection jars

From Pinterest to backyard weddings, Mason jars pretty much rule the cute scene. Jarden Home Brands, makers of Ball canning jars, are even reporting a 31 percent increase in jar sales — most of which have nothing to do with canning jam. To add more fuel to your precious projects, the company just released a limited-edition line, the Ball Heritage collection, of pint-size jars in their original vintage blue color. Why the reissue, you ask? It's to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the "Perfect Mason." So pour some bubbly and raise a jar to, well, the most perfect Mason jar. $12.99 for a pack of six, www.freshpreservingstore.com

Horoscope

♈ Aries | March 21 - April 20. When in a discussion with another person, you might suddenly have an ingenious flash of inspiration. If this happens, do not treat it lightly.

♉ Taurus | April 21 - May 21. Someone whom you'd like to know better is also eager to learn more about you. You just might get an opportunity to develop things further.

♊ Gemini | May 22 - June 20. Although unexpected success is likely to come through an unusual chain of events, this doesn't mean that you should leave important things to chance.

♋ Cancer | June 21 - July 22. You're in an interesting cycle where friendships are concerned, and some intriguing people could soon enter your life. Be sure to be open-minded and receptive.

♌ Leo | July 23 - Aug. 22. A well-intentioned, dependable friend could have an interesting proposition. It could produce copious benefits for both of you.

♍ Virgo | Aug. 23 - Sept. 22. A colleague is as eager as you are to firm up a partnership arrangement. However, both parties need assurance that the deal will be fair and equitable.

♏ Scorpio | Oct. 23 - Nov. 21. Spontaneous events will likely turn out to be the most fun. Be sure your schedule isn't overly structured so that you can go along with the flow of things.

♐ Sagittarius | Nov. 22 - Dec. 21. Improvements in your material circumstances should begin soon. If you've been involved in something unprofitable, you might be able to improve the outlook.

♑ Capricorn | Dec. 22 - Jan 20. Good news could be delivered via a strange pipeline. It could pertain to something either social or romantic, and will be quite interesting.

♓ Pisces | Feb. 19 - March 20. The power of your personality is much higher than you may realize. You're making a good impression on others, and this will be reflected in your popularity. BERNICE BEDE OSOL

Athletes a good target for terrorists

I was living in Germany when the first terrorist attack on athletes occurred. In was during the 1972 Olympics in Munich. Eleven athletes were killed by the Palestinian group Black September. The second attack on athletes was prevented by British authorities during the 2012 Olympics in London after an al-Qaeda website had posted instructions how to make explosives mixing chemicals with products of daily use. Athletes, and especially marathons, are soft targets with enormous psychological impact.

Don't let evil take what good patriots won dearly

Re: "Sympathy for bag searches" (Metro, April 17)

In response to Douglas Annis' letter: The bomber could have been hiding bomb-making materials in his house or car. Should the military conduct house-to-house searches? The bomber could have been hiding bomb-making materials in his body. Should the military be conducting rectal examinations? I could have naked pictures of my wife or confidential medical records in my backpack, and it was disturbing for the military to be searching it this morning on this subway. The military has not conducted writs of assistance in Boston since the 1770s, when the British were in charge, and it was a sad day to see the memories of the thousands of fallen American troops who have fought for freedom desecrated by our own government putting into place writs of assistance. The terrorists have won when we honor Patriots Day by destroying the very thing Patriots Day is supposed to commemorate.

Marathon bombings

Celtics honor victims

The Boston Celtics played their first game since Monday's bombings at the Boston Marathon and wore a black stripe on the left shoulder of their team jerseys.

Bruins hold emotional ceremony prior to game against Sabres

Boston Marathon. Fans are united in support of Boston in the first pro sports event since Monday's attacks.

With Boston itching to get back to some semblance of normalcy following Monday's Boston Marathon bombings, the Boston Bruins hosted the first pro sports event in the city since the attacks in front of a sell-out crowd of 17,565 at TD Garden last night.

"It's been a sad last two days," Bruins captain Zdeno Chara told NBC Sports moments before last night's game against the Sabres. "We want to help. We know we represent this city and we want to show that support the best way we know, and that's to play this game and play the best we can."

Bruins defenseman Andrew Ference spoke on the tough nature of Boston residents.

"They call themselves Massholes for a reason. They're tough as nails. ... They set the bar high," said Ference to NBC.

The TD Garden was illuminated on its exterior with blue and yellow colors, the hues of the Boston Marathon logo.

A Bruins T-shirt, which had the name "Martin Richard" written above a No. 8 on the back, was draped on the Bobby Orr statue outside of the Garden. Richard, an 8-year-old Bruins fan, was killed in the bombings on Monday.

A video tribute was shown to the Garden crowd in the pregame ceremonies, with the words "Boston strong" flashing on the scoreboard. As has been tradition for more than three decades at Bruins home games, singer Rene Rancourt delivered his unique rendition of the national anthem. This time, however, Rancourt paused early in the song, allowing the sell-out crowd to sing the rest of the anthem.

Chants of "USA! USA! USA!" then rang out through the Garden just prior to the puck drop.

Traditionally, Pierce has come up big on Broadway

Celtics. Boston opens up its first-round series against the Knicks in New York this weekend.

When it comes to rivalries between cities, it doesn't get much bigger than Boston and New York. Whether it's Sox-Yanks or Patriots-Jets, the buildup and in-game tension is matched by no other.

But believe it or not, it might be Celtics-Knicks that's been the best Boston-New York rivalry over the past few years.

This season, for the first time since Kevin Garnett arrived in Boston, the Celtics didn't win the Atlantic Division — the Knicks did. The two teams will face off in the opening round of the NBA postseason.

That's music to a lot of people's ears, as Celtics-Knicks games — under the spotlight of two major media markets — are always exciting. For sure, Celtics captain Paul Pierce's ears perked up when he heard the first-round tune. Perhaps no current player in the NBA has stepped up — and on — the Knicks as many times as Pierce has.

In 54 career games against the Knicks, Pierce is averaging 23.4 points per game — the most he's averaged against any other Eastern Conference team in his career. And his 45.7 field-goal percentage against New York is the small forward's third highest against Eastern Conference teams.

He's also taken (444) and made (365) more free throws against the Knicks than any other team in the NBA, converting them at an 82.2-percent rate. Two games stand out when it comes to Pierce and the Knicks.

Prime-time Pierce

"I don't know what I do with a lot of these shots. I just react. I don't know what I'm going to do. I just react. I don't think about it."

Celtics captain Paul Pierce after hitting a key jumper on Jan. 7, 2013, to give the Celtics a win at Madison Square Garden over the Knicks

The first came on Dec. 15, 2010, with the Celtics at Madison Square Garden. Down seven points to start the fourth quarter, Boston clawed back and took a two-point lead. After Danilo Gallinari hit two free throws, the C's took the final possession down to 0.4 seconds when Pierce hit a step-back jumper to earn a 118-116 win.

The second was in Game 3 of the NBA's opening round of the 2011 postseason. Boston was up 2-0 in the series and at MSG, where Pierce made sure the Knicks would go down without a fight. He dropped 38 points on 14-of-18 shooting from the field (6-of-8 from 3-point range) and sent Knicks fans home without a sliver of hope for the series.

Game 1 of this year's Celtics-Knicks series will reportedly be played Saturday, though no formal announcement had been made by the NBA as of yesterday.

Feeling better,
but not where you want to be?

No one chooses to have depression. But every day, people choose to do something about it. And for many, it means taking an antidepressant. But for some, this may not always be enough. Low mood and loss of interest are just a few of the common symptoms that can continue to stay with you – even while you're treating depression. If you're experiencing unresolved symptoms, it may be time to consider additional options.

The Depression Outreach Study is evaluating an investigational drug that's intended to be taken with your current antidepressant (SSRI), to see if it helps to lessen any ongoing symptoms of depression. All eligible study participants will receive investigational study drugs, coverage for their current prescription antidepressant, and study-related care at no cost. If you're at least 18 years old, have been diagnosed with Major Depressive Disorder (MDD), and are taking a prescription antidepressant, you may be eligible to participate.

Red Sox starters are pushing each other, results are showing

MLB. Clay Buchholz and Jon Lester are leading the way for an improved starting rotation.

With so much at stake following a disastrous 2012 season, the key nearly everyone talked about regarding the Red Sox was the starting pitching. This was especially true coming off of a year in which Boston finished second-to-last in the American League in both ERA and wins.

No one could have scripted a better start for the Red Sox starting rotation in 2013. Sox starters had held opponents to three runs or fewer through 12 games, which was the longest such streak in team history. The starters had also allowed two runs or fewer in eight of the 12 games, a very impressive feat.

The success of Jon Lester and Clay Buchholz has carried over to the other members of the rotation. Although Ryan Dempster is 0-1 record-wise, he's pitched quite well, including a two-hit, one-run, seven-inning performance Monday.

"I think the nice part is you see guys in the rotation pitching as well as they have, even Ace [Aceves] and the start by Lackey, they have all thrown so well," Dempster said, following his start Monday. "You don't want to be the leaky wheel, you want to be the one who goes out there and keeps the streak going."
